

The world's largest football database in the palm of your hand

Makers of Football Manager announce the release of the ideal companion app for the summer of football

June 11th, 2018

Sports Interactive and SEGA are delighted to announce the immediate release of FMdB, a new app that gives you access to the world's largest football database in your pocket. FMdB is available immediately as a free download on the App Store and will be available on Google Play in the near future.

Powered by Football Manager, FMdB includes data on more than 400,000 players from across the world of football, giving a quick guide to their ability, potential, contract details and position. For those that subscribe to the app, there is additional information about each players' attributes, career history and more. You can keep tabs on the players that are making the headlines with the app's 'Trending' section and share player profiles with friends via social media. In addition, there is a host of nation and club information including each team's best 25 players, sorted by ability.

"FMdB is the ultimate football knowledge app, essential for the info that you need ahead of what promises to be a fantastic summer of football and beyond," said Sports Interactive's Studio Director, Miles Jacobson. "If you're unsure how good the player is playing at right back, or who the midfielder is your team is looking at in the transfer window, FMdB gives you that info at the press of a button – it's time to be properly ITK."

Further updates to FMdB are planned over the coming weeks and months into the start of the European football season.
